What is the CIPD & how is it structured?

The CIPD is a professional body for people management and development. It is the leading organisation in the field, with over 150,000 members and more than 1,000 employees. The CIPD's mission is to promote the profession of people management and development, and to provide its members with the knowledge, skills and support they need to do their jobs effectively. The CIPD also offers a range of qualifications, including the Level 3 Certificate in People Management, the Level 5 Diploma in People Management, and the Level 7 Diploma in Strategic People Management. The CIPD's qualifications are recognised by employers worldwide and are designed to help people develop the skills they need to succeed in their careers in people management and development.

The CIPD is structured into three main parts: the membership, the governance, and the operational. The membership is made up of people who have joined the CIPD and paid their membership fees. The governance is made up of the boards and committees that govern the CIPD and make decisions about its strategy and policies. The operational is made up of the staff who work for the CIPD and carry out the day-to-day operations of the organisation.

The CIPD's membership is made up of people who have joined the CIPD and paid their membership fees. The membership is divided into different categories, depending on the level of qualification and experience of the member. The CIPD's governance is made up of the boards and committees that govern the CIPD and make decisions about its strategy and policies. The CIPD's operational is made up of the staff who work for the CIPD and carry out the day-to-day operations of the organisation.

The CIPD's qualifications are designed to be flexible and to meet the needs of people who want to develop their careers in people management and development.
